MY STAY IN SLOVAKIA

During my stay in Slovakia I experienced a lot of beautiful city life, nature and architecture. I got to see two castles, Bratislava Castle and Redstone Castle. They were a little bit different from the Norwegian castles I have seen. The architecture and the decoration on the outside and on the inside of the castles where gorgeous.

We had about three hours after dinner every evening to explore the city alone, and what I experienced during that time was that there was so many people outside. In Norway most people go home around eight o'clock in the evening at least. However, when we were sitting in Mc. Donald's (yes we went to Mc. Donald's and nowhere else) and drank coffee and hot chocolate, there was so many people both inside and outside on the streets.

I think we came to Slovakia during the rain season or something, because it was raining almost every day of our stay there. And I found out that there was a hole in my right shoe, so I got wet on only my right foot every, single day. But we were told that there is usually nice and warm whether there, so we trust on the locals on that.

There wasn't a lot of negative sides of the trip except the fact that my foot got wet, almost no one in the shops could talk English and that the Olympic games at the school was a little bit messy organized. However, I really liked the fact that we got hot lunch every day, and that the students at the school so good welcomed us. I regret that I did not socialize more, but I suck at talking English so no one would have understood me anyway.

I was surprised that there was so many people out in the evening. When we sat at Mc. Donald's and drank coffee and hot chocolate, there was so many people. We are not used to that in Norway.

Something I really liked about the city was the architecture. There was so many beautiful and old buildings around the whole city. I love old architecture, but I got a little bit sad when I saw that some of the old buildings wasn't taken care of and looked like they were falling apart.

Something that was different was the school. In Bratislava, they got hot food for lunch every day, something we can only dream of on St. Hallvard.
